Dear Judge McLaughlin:

My name is Boris Nemirovsky, M.D., and I have been practicing medicine over the last 37 years. The last 25 years I have spent treating thousands of people in the City of Philadelphia. The first time I met Andrew Mogilyansky, who is the son of one of my dearest friends, was 20 years ago at JFK Airport as a sponsor of his arrival to the United States from the former Soviet Union. At first glance, I was amazed by his eyes, which sparkled with kindness, softness and a desire to help anybody surrounding him. Having myself two children of Andrew's age, I was astonished by his incredible desire to study, and great achievements in all aspects of education at Columbia University, where he enrolled without wasting any time. I will never forget Andrew's invaluable help for many years setting up operations of our multi-specialty Pain Clinic. During this work, he was always admired and respected by all of our employees without exception. At this point, I would like to mention that for all his work, Andrew never wanted to accept any rewards, neither financial nor material. He considered his enormous efforts helping to run our medical office as a "Good Samaritan" job only.

I have first-hand knowledge about Andrew's work and leadership in many charities, especially organizing and running funds for the children of Beslan. Being a busy businessman, he always demonstrated his devotion, loyalty, support and generosity for his own family as well as many friends, and often people whom he didn't know personally. Because of all of these qualities, I consider myself to be blessed to know Andrew Mogilyansky who, in my opinion, might be considered a role model in our country.

Having said all of the above, I consider this letter to be just the tip of the iceberg in describing the character and many good deeds of Andrew Mogilyansky, but nevertheless, I hope that it will be helpful to you.

Respectfully,

Boris Nemirovsky, M.D.
