Dear Judge McLaughlin,

My name is Yekaterina Ivanova. I am currently working as Financial Associate at International Fund Services, the funds administrator. I would like to share with you my experience of knowing Andrew Mogilyansky as a friend and a family man – a respectful son, loving husband and caring father.

I have known Andrew for over 10 years since he started dating my close friend and later his wife – Oksana. He has always been attentive and thoughtful about everyone around him, even if it was someone he saw for the first time. Never indifferent to someone else's difficulty, Andrew would make every effort to come up with a possible solution or a way to help, whether by advice or action.

After coming to United States Andrew embraced American culture and values, yet he had not turned his back on his home country. Once he saw disasters unfold, Andrew channeled his desire to help less fortunate by organizing a charity foundation for the benefit of terror victims in Russia.

He and his family were personally involved in helping families who had suffered in the terror attacks, arranging for them to come to the US for medical treatment, and hosting them under their roof. I was very much impressed by this outpour of love and care for complete strangers. I know that foundation have inspired many people to contribute and express their giving nature and help those who need it the most.

It is rare nowadays to meet a person who is so enthusiastic about helping and supporting other people, who is able to inspire others to do the same, and Andrew is such a person.

His love and care for his family is huge, he takes active part in bringing up his children to be as outgoing and selfless as their parents are. His presence and guidance and support are essential for his family and will be very much missed.

Andrew helped great many people and, given the chance, will prove his potential to once again bring hope and most positive change into other peoples' lives.

Respectfully,

Yekaterina Ivanova
